The French Defense requires a lot of sharp, tactical play. It is "like" the Sicilian insofar as it tries to avoid e5 as a response to e4, and take away the initiative from White. But although "tactical," the Sicilian offers more of a positional game than the French. The French Defense - a good Chess Opening for Black The French defence is a solid and hard to beat chess opening, but Black can feel locked in as the game takes on a blocked character at times, especially in the early phase of the opening.

French Defense - Chess Openings - Chess.com The French Defense meets 1.e4 with 1...e6, preparing to counter the e4 pawn with 2...d5. Black blocks in their light-squared bishop, but gains a solid pawn chain and counter-attacking possibilities. The French Defense is named after a 1834 correspondence game between the cities of London and Paris, in. The French Defense - Chess Forums - Chess.com The French Defense. NobleElevator Jun 19, 2016 #1 I always play the French when I'm black! FM Enzy63 Jun 19, 2016 #2 French is a very solid opening. It used to be my main response to 1. e4 and I rarely lost with it, but wins where also not too common. So having a second opening in the repertoire against e4 absolutely makes sense, especially if.
