Tanks in France - Wikipedia French development into tanks began during World War I as an effort to overcome the stalemate of trench warfare. The Schneider CA1 was the first tank produced by France, and 400 units were built. The French also experimented with various tank designs, such as the Frot-Laffly landship, Boirault machine and Souain experiment. WW2 French tanks - Tank Encyclopedia French tanks were classified as their counterparts in Great Britain, in infantry and cavalry models, and some "chars de rupture" (breakthrough tanks). Production and testing was relentless in the twenties and thirties, leading to a new generation of armored vehicles in 1935-36, which formed the bulk of the armored forces of France (then numerically one of the largest in the world) in September 1939 (4436. Cold War French Tanks - Tank Encyclopedia In short, prewar French tanks were slow, very well protected and well armed. After the war and until the 1970s, French tanks were generally very fast, if not the fastest around, well armed, but poorly protected.

50 Years of French Tanks - warhistoryonline.com The most numerous French tank of the inter-war years, the R-35 had the same turret as the H-35 and H-39. Like other French light tanks, it had only a two-man crew and limited range, but its armor was thicker than that of many peers.
